

A requirement to record and retain records of our programming would impose a significant burden on our operation and our finances. We are a single, locally-owned radio station. As it is, the station is still not profitable after 4 1/2 years of trying to be.

We are responsible broadcasters who maintain decent standards of conduct on our airwaves and take very seriously our duty to serve the public interest, convenience, and necessity.

We have never had a complaint about indecency filed with the FCC. And none have been made to us directly.

If such recordings are deemed necessary by the Commission to enforce decency standards, why not require them only of stations that have had a certain number of indecency complaints or forfeitures due to indecency violations?

This proposed rule would penalize all broadcasters because a few misbehave. Please don't impose this extremely burdensome rule on all of us just because of the behavior of a few irresponsible broadcasters.
